

Roller Compacted Concrete Pavement: Design and Construction - Georgia

Tuesday, November 6, 2007
Maggiano's Little Italy—Buckhead
Atlanta, Georgia

Who should Attend

This technical course is structured for the designer, contractor, developer, construction manager and other professionals involved with designing, specifying and construction for roadway, parking lot or general site construction/reconstruction. While the course is open to all, we believe it will be most valuable to consulting engineers and architects, property owners, construction managers and geotechnical consultants/construction testing consultants.

Roller Compacted Concrete Pavement: Design and Construction

Tuesday, November 6, 2007
Maggiano's Little Italy—Buckhead
Atlanta, Georgia

Course Description

Experience the innovations that will save your construction costs and time while providing a long-term pavement. Roller-Compacted Concrete (RCC) has been associated with large scale projects. In the last 10 years, innovative applications and production methods have grown exponentially. Currently, RCC is being specified for applications including new residential roads, urban street reconstruction, industrial and commercial site paving, ports, lumber facilities, military bases, interstate shoulders, highway bases, park and ride lots, maintenance facilities, and more.

This workshop will include information on the latest research as well as design and construction procedures for RCC, to include appropriate applications, mix design, materials engineering, pavement design guidelines and construction techniques. It is the intent of this course to provide a thorough technical education on RCC by experienced professionals from the design and construction industry. This education will put you on the cutting edge of value-engineered pavements. All attendees will receive a binder of information on RCC and a copy of the RCC-Pave Design Software.
